ONCE there was an old man called Gepetto. He was poor and he lived alone in a small town near the sea.

Gepetto was a carpenter. He made things out of wood. One day Gepetto made a boy out of wood. He made a wooden puppet.

'I will call you Pinocchio!' said Gepetto.

'Put me down, Dad!' said the puppet.

'Oh!' said Gepetto. 'You can talk!'

'Of course I can!' said Pinocchio.

'Put me on the floor. I feel full of life and I want to dance.'

'Are you a good boy?' asked Gepetto.

'Of course I am!' said Pinocchio. 'I'm the best boy in the world!' Then he ran out of the door.

'Pinocchio, my son!' cried old Gepetto.

'Come back!'

The little puppet didn't listen. He just ran. But Gepetto loved his son and so he ran after him.

'Come back!' shouted Gepetto. He tried to grab the puppet but Pinocchio ran faster and faster. Gepetto was old and could not catch him, and suddenly he could not see him either.

'Puppet Boy, where are you?' Gepetto cried.

Pinocchio ran back to Gepetto's room. But no one was there, because Gepetto was still out searching for him. Pinocchio was all alone and he was hungry, but there was no food. Then he heard a voice.

'Pinocchio! Look up!' There was a green cricket on the wall, with very bright eyes.

'Boys should be good to their parents,' it said. 'Good boys go to school and help people. But you're not a good boy. You're a bad wooden puppet!'

Then Pinocchio did another bad thing. He shouted at the cricket and chased it away. So now he was alone again.

'Please, I want some bread!' said Pinocchio.

'Oh, do you?' said the man. 'Wait there.' He went inside, and then he came back to the window and poured a bucket of water all over Pinocchio.

'Here! Have a drink!' he said. 'Now go away or I'll throw the bucket at you too!'

Then Pinocchio began to cry. He was wet and cold and hungry. And he was all alone.

Pinocchio ran back to Gepetto's room and fell asleep by the fire. Then his wooden feet got burnt.

When Gepetto came home, Pinocchio cried, 'Oh Dad! I'm sorry that I was a bad boy! Make me some new feet, Dad! And give me something to eat!'

Gepetto wanted to be angry. But then he saw Pinocchio's poor burnt feet.

'My poor boy!' he said. And he gave him all the food he had – three hard green pears. Pinocchio was so hungry he ate them all.

Gepetto made Pinocchio some new feet and the little puppet hugged him.

'Listen,' said Gepetto. 'You must go to school. I want you to work hard and be a good boy.'

'But I can't go to school without a writing book,' said Pinocchio.

'Wait there,' said Gepetto. 'I'll get one.'

When Gepetto returned, Pinocchio said, 'Where's your coat, Dad?' Gepetto didn't answer. He just said, 'Look! Here's your writing book!'

'Oh Dad!' said Pinocchio. 'You sold your coat to buy my book, didn't you? I'll be a good boy. I'll go to school tomorrow.'

But on his way to school, Pinocchio saw something.

'Two pence,' said a man. 'It only costs two pence to see the famous puppets dance.'

'I'm going to school,' said Pinocchio. 'And I don't have any money.'

'Hey!' said the man. 'Go to school tomorrow. I'll give you two pence for that writing book. Come and see the dancing puppets!'

It did sound interesting so Pinocchio said, 'OK.'

But the puppets stopped dancing when they saw Pinocchio.

'Hey! Puppet boy!' they shouted. 'Come and dance with us!'

Then everyone in the audience turned and looked at him.

Then the nasty Puppet Master arrived. 'Why aren't you puppets dancing?' he shouted. 'And who's this?' he asked, looking at Pinocchio.

The puppets were so afraid that they could not move.

'OK!' shouted the Puppet Master.

'Time for bed!'

'But first I need some wood for the fire. I want to cook my dinner!'

He grabbed an old puppet. 'Ah! Here's some wood!' he laughed.

Suddenly the Puppet Master felt tired. He dropped the old wooden puppet onto the floor.

'OK,' he said. 'No more dancing today. You can all go to bed.'

In the morning, the Puppet Master spoke to Pinocchio.

'Where do you come from?' he asked.

'My father's a poor old carpenter,' said Pinocchio. 'He sold his coat to buy me a writing book. But I sold that book to see your puppet show. I was bad, but I want to be good now.'

'You're an interesting ... thing,' said the Puppet Master.

'And brave. Here ... take these coins. Give them to your father. Now go! Quick! Or I might keep you.'

'Oh! Thanks, Mr Puppet Master,' said Pinocchio. Then he grabbed the coins and ran.

Pinocchio walked home through the town. On the way, he met the Fox brothers.

‘Hello, Pinocchio,’ said Tommy Fox. ‘What are you doing?’

‘I’m going home,’ said Pinocchio. ‘I’ve got five coins! So I’m going to buy a new coat for my dad! And a writing book, because I need to go to school.’

‘Forget about the coat,’ said Danny Fox. ‘Winter will be over soon.’

‘And you don’t need school,’ said Tommy Fox. ‘You need to go into business. Listen! There’s a magic field outside the town. Plant your coins there and they will grow into money trees. Each one will have a thousand coins shining in the sunlight!’

‘Wow!’ said Pinocchio.

'And you?' the waiter asked Pinocchio.

'Er ...' said Pinocchio. 'Do you have any pears?'

'Not today,' said the waiter.

'Then just some bread and cheese for me, please,' said Pinocchio.

At the end of the meal, the Fox brothers said, 'We're just going to wash our hands and then we'll pay the bill.'

'I haven't got any coins!' lied Pinocchio. And when he told this lie, his nose suddenly got longer.

Just then two robbers grabbed Pinocchio.

'Give us your money!' they cried.

'I haven't got any money!' lied Pinocchio. And his nose grew longer again.

'What's wrong with your nose?' said the robbers. Pinocchio hid the coin in his mouth.

A kind lady came to help Pinocchio and took him to her home.

'Hello, Pinocchio. I'm a friend and I saw it all!' she said.

'Those robbers were trying to steal your money.'

'Money?' said Pinocchio. 'What money?' And his nose grew longer again!

'They wanted your money,' said the Kind Friend. 'Where is it now?'

'Under the tree,' lied Pinocchio. Really it was in his hand. So many lies! Again his nose got longer.

'Your nose is growing,' smiled the Friend. 'You're lying.'

'I'm not!' said Pinocchio. And his nose grew longer again.

Suddenly Pinocchio's nose was as long as the bed!

'Listen,' said the Kind Friend. 'Stop telling lies!'

So then he showed her his coin, and at once his nose was perfectly alright again.

Pinocchio didn’t want to tell a lie so he showed them the coin.

‘Now!’ said Danny Fox. ‘Let’s plant it in the magic field.’

‘No,’ said Pinocchio. ‘I don’t want to.’

They came to the sea and the wind was strong. Pinocchio saw Gepetto in a little boat.

‘Father!’ he cried. ‘Dad!’

His father looked up and saw him. And then, suddenly, he fell into the water.

‘Dad!’ shouted Pinocchio.

‘I will help you!’ And bravely he jumped into the sea. The waves were big and Pinocchio went up and down all day. But he couldn’t find his father.

Some hours later, the water carried Pinocchio to an island.

waves

Pinocchio lay on the sand. He was tired, lonely and hungry – but he was alive.

After a while he got up. He saw people working. Two men were making baskets.

‘Hello!’ said Pinocchio. ‘Can you give me some bread?’

‘You have to work for your food here,’ they said.

Another man was mending a net. ‘Do you know how to mend nets?’ he said.

‘Er ...’ said Pinocchio.

'Yes,' she said.

'But you're different!'

'Yes. I am older now.'

'Will I grow older?' asked Pinocchio.

'No,' she said. 'Puppets can't grow. Only real boys can grow.'

Then Pinocchio started to cry. 'I want to be a real boy! I don't want to be a wooden puppet!'

'If you go to school and work hard,' she said, 'then you will become a real boy.'

So the next day Pinocchio went to school.

'Oh!' shouted the school bullies. 'A puppet!'

'You can't learn anything, Wooden Head!' said a boy. But Pinocchio didn't listen to them. He worked hard. He listened to the teacher. He didn't talk in class. And he made friends with a boy called Candlewick. The Kind Friend was pleased with him.

But the next day Candlewick said, 'Hey, Pinocchio. I'm not going to school today. I'm going to Lazyland.'

'What's that?' said Pinocchio.

'It's a fun place,' said Candlewick. 'Nobody does any work. There are no teachers. We just play and eat sweets all day.'

Then a very strange bus arrived.

It was pulled by eight grey donkeys.

'Come on,' said Candlewick.

The bus did look interesting, so Pinocchio said, 'OK.'

'You'll be sorry!' said one of the donkeys. 'I was a boy like you once!'

Lazyland was a noisy place. There were children everywhere, playing and shouting and eating sweets. It was fun at first, but soon Pinocchio felt tired and wanted to go home.

'Oh, come on,' said Candlewick. 'Have some more sweets!'
The next day Pinocchio felt strange.

'Ah!' he cried. 'Candlewick!
Help! My ears! Oh no! Your

Pinocchio fell into the deep blue water. And slowly he changed back into a puppet. Then a huge whale opened its mouth and suddenly Pinocchio found himself inside. There he could breathe ... and there inside the whale he saw ... his father!

'Dad!' he cried. 'I tried to help you!'

'There's nothing to eat but fish,' said the old man. 'How can we get out of here?'

'The way we came in,' said Pinocchio. 'Let's go!'

Now Gepetto was too old and tired to work, so Pinocchio took him home. Pinocchio went back to school.

'You are a good boy, Pinocchio,' Gepetto said.

'But I'm not a boy, Dad,' said Pinocchio. 'I'm just a wooden puppet!'

Pinocchio worked hard. Every day he went to school and listened to his teacher, and at night he helped Gepetto.

Together they cooked their evening meal and talked about Pinocchio's day at school.

The Kind Friend was getting old too, so Pinocchio took food to her and helped her carry buckets of water.

Some time later, Pinocchio had a dream. The Kind Friend spoke to him.

‘Pinocchio!’ she said. ‘You are brave! And now you are also kind. You work hard and you are good. Because of this you are changing. Your heart is now a real heart. One day you will be a real man. Pinocchio! You are not a puppet any more! You are a real boy!’

And when Pinocchio woke up ... he saw that it was true!
